is to allow Omaha to construct a convention center, that's the aim of the bill. It would say that any type of gathering, whether a trade show, a convention of any kind had occurred, in the three years preceding the construction, could not be counted toward attributable revenue. Attributable revenue is that new tax money which speculators say will be generated by having people come from outside of Nebraska to attend these events. The events are regional, national, and international. Once you have one of these events that you intend to try to establish as qualified, you'll have to show that at least 50 percent of those who registered for this event and actually attended it are from outside of Nebraska. That would give you that participant base that's needed to start applying these multipliers. That would also give you the requisite number of people from outside Nebraska to justify having the event labeled one of those that can be taken into consideration. What will be done is to try to calculate, now I'm not saying I agree with all of this, what is to be done is to try to calculate how much money, in the form of taxes, sales tax and income tax, in some situations, would be generated as a result of the construction of this facility, the attendance of these outside participants, and the money they spend. Now the entire amount of money they spend is not attributable income. The only attributable revenue, that's the word I ought to use, revenue, rather than income. The only attributable revenue would be new tax money. So, if a convention grossed $1 million, which I doubt, that money would not go toward establishing the amount of attributable revenue, the tax that would be generated as a result; direct taxes, if there are any on those attendees, plus the amount that they would be expected to spend which would be taxed. A multiplier would be at least two...well, no more than twice...the multiplier could be no more than two. It would be one and a half, I believe. So, I guess, that means you take one and a half times whatever this calculated amount of tax would be. What is supposed to be done after some other steps are taken, which I will go into in more detail later, is to certify this amount. That money will be put into a fund designed for this convention/meeting center purpose. That money in that fund constitutes a pot; 70 percent of that would go to Omaha, 30 percent would be put into what I call the crumb-snatcher fund for the rest of the state. If you look from Sections 13 to the end of the bill, I believe, you will see that second segment of
